Worth 25 points- Use 45 minutes at most to complete this

Remember... 4PHC

Example: Question 1B: Read all of the sources. "The Tsarist regime became more secure in the years up to 1914." How far do these sources support this statement?

1. At the top of your AICE exam practice booklet, write "1" and "B" in the columns.
2. Plan each PEE HAPPY paragraph. Use a T-graphs, Venn diagram, etc., but at least write "PEE HAPPY" on the 1st line of the answer sheet. You can earn credit for planning but be careful how much time you spend doing this.
3. Read the question/prompt before starting each paragraph. Look at where each source is from and when each source was written. Consider what was happening in history when the source originated.
4. While reading each source, underline or circle the evidence, and if you are planning, put the information there.
5. Read one source at a time then write the PEE HAPPY paragraph for it. Start with Source A. If Source A is a picture and you don't understand it 100%, start with Source B. If the first source you start with agrees with the question/prompt, search the rest of the sources until you find a source that disagrees. If the first source you start with disagrees with the question/prompt, search the rest of the sources until you find a source that agrees.
6. Your first 2 paragraphs must include a source that agrees and a source that disagrees.
7. When you are done with your first 2 paragraphs, make sure they are solid. Decide which paragraph is the weakest.
8. If you have time, write paragraph 3 as an agree or disagree, whichever was the weakest in your first 2 paragraphs. There may not be a 2nd agree or disagree.
9. Memorize the words below that are in italics word for word. They will be your sentence starters for every Paper 1B.

Answer one question from one section only.

Section A: European option

The Russian Revolution, 1894–1921

- 1 Read the sources and then answer both parts of the question.

Source A

*A French cartoon entitled 'Astonishment' published in 1906.
The larger figure represents the Russian people.
The Tsar, on the right, says, 'How he has grown in just a year!'*

Source B

The application of the death penalty has been terribly frequent during the last few years. According to a lawyer in St Petersburg, 'In 1908, 7016 civilians were delivered to the military tribunals as a result of emergency laws. In one single year more men were executed than during the preceding thirty-three years of the history of these courts, and one and a half times more than during the so-called revolutionary period of 1905–07.' These figures relate only to capital punishment sanctioned by 'justice'. A greater number perished without trial. In 1905–06, during the stifling of the revolutionary movement, 26 000 persons were killed by the army and police. The number of those in prison had more than doubled between 1897 and 1909. These unfortunates consist principally of political criminals. As for the number of those deported to the north of European Russia or Siberia, it is so great it cannot be established.

From an account written by a former member of the Duma in 1913.

The Third Duma (1907–12) coincided with a period of remarkable economic prosperity. Government revenues rose steadily. The railway administration, which was the subject of constant criticism, was so much improved that the railways made a profit for the first time. Most important of all was the cooperation between Stolypin and the Duma in addressing land settlement. Whole areas which had been uncultivated became prosperous. As soon as individual peasants owned land, improvements were seen in dairy farming and marketing of farm produce. Many peasants sold their new property and came to the towns with money in their pockets to start work. The men at the head of the leading trades and industries worked together to secure an intelligent commercial policy. They held their own industrial parliament within the sittings of the Duma and received more and more interest from the government. Foreign capitalists, having obtained a better knowledge of Russian trade conditions and greater confidence in Russian investments, invested in Russia at an ever-increasing rate.

From 'A History of Russia' written by a British professor who had lived in Russia, published in 1926.

Source D

Between the 1905 revolution and the war, industrial production in Russia approximately doubled. By 1914, when Tsarist Russia had attained the highest point of its prosperity, the national income per person was eight times less than in the United States – not surprising when 80 per cent of the workforce of Russia was occupied with agriculture while in the United States almost 70 per cent were engaged in industry. On the eve of war, for every hundred square kilometres of land, Russia had only 0.4 kilometres of railroads, while Germany had 11.7 kilometres. Heavy industry was almost wholly under the control of foreign finance. Foreigners made profits from Russia but only held influence in foreign parliaments and did not promote the struggle for political rights in Russia. The proletariat grew rapidly, in a sharp break from the past. It is this fact, combined with the concentrated oppressions of Tsarism, that made the Russian workers open to the boldest revolutionary ideas.

From Trotsky's 'History of the Russian Revolution', published in 1930.
